

WOLFRAM magazine

Home | Current Issue | Archive | Blog | About | Contact

Current Issue

“The key is to face your fears, take on new challenges, and have an open mind. Remember, money does not make you happy, but a fulfilled life does.”

“You can learn so much more pursuing your RTW (round the world) than you could in your MBA. And at much less the cost,” said Craig. “Plus, as your first course of action I’d recommend foreign language. Learn one. Spend the time to pick up more than that ‘cerveza.’ For me, language allowed me to move to Mexico City for my next job. It kept my travels going with a paycheck.”

How about die broke-asses with significant others? Should you travel with a companion? Or tackle the world alone?

Paul Cox and Melanie McClean are a traveling couple from the east coast. Calling themselves the Wayward Winos, Paul and Melanie trekked through South America in February 2009, documenting their travels as videographers. Eventually their wayward blog won them a summer of eco-friendly travel across the Delmarva Peninsula as Host Our fun, green and travel-minded.

“Taking the world head on with hopes of adventure and excitement doesn’t need to be something that causes a wallet meltdown,” said Paul. “The uncertainty of the where the next night’s rest will be adds a bit of spice to any journey forcing travelers to sometimes forge new relationships and reach out in ways that they wouldn’t have done. I’m not saying leave for the next voyage with the change found on the way to the airport, but don’t stress about not having a huge bankroll either; embrace it and embrace living on the cheap.”

Traveling can be a dream come true for the young and broke according to these travel folks. The key is to face your fears, take on new challenges, and have an open mind. Remember, money does not make you happy, but a fulfilled life does. So keep saving those pennies and start bookmarking

View in full screen for best reading experience.